ON THE READING OF PLAYS

" * * * A final impetus has been given to the publishing of plays, not only by the swing of the modern dramatic movement, the popularization of the idea of reading plays as literature, but also by the unremitting efforts of critics and students of the contemporary drama to bring the best examples to the attention of the public."—Archibald Henderson, The Printed Play.

"As soon as the imagination has been trained to 'see' the characters, to 'hear' their talk, to create their surroundings quickly from a hint or two about scenery, to realize the workings of their minds with the aid of stage directions—then reading plays gives more pleasure than reading novels. There is no padding. No arid wastes of descriptive twaddle delay the action. No tiresome moralizing by the author insults the intelligent reader, who is quite able to draw conclusions for himself. Anyone who is accustomed to reading good plays finds the novel slow and heavy with a burden of unnecessary words."—Daily Mail.

" * * * A reader must, in short, be something of an actor to project as on a stage a little restricted world and its inhabitants. Fortunately, however, the acting instinct is universal in all of us, or was so when we were children. It can be recaptured again by a continued and well directed effort. That it sharpens the discernment, quickens emotional response, broadens human sympathy, and enriches life—that it is, in brief, one of the means of culture and of the sources of joy—seems to have been overlooked by the English-speaking world.

" * * * Only those nations which have a habit of reading plays—removing them thus from the deceiving glamour of the actor's personality and of scenic investiture—have been able to banish all the absurdities and conventions and theatrical falsities which have been from time immemorial tolerated on the stage because they afford emotions."—Algernon Tassin, The Art of Play Reading.

"It is a tribute to the literary quality of our modern plays that so many of them gain rather than lose in the printed page."—Globe.

" * * * No need to point out that the reading of plays multiplies enormously the number that one may enjoy in a season. It takes a whole evening to see even the cheapest farce on the stage; in the same time, and at half the expense, one may go through two such masterpieces as Hauptmann's "The Weavers" and Synge's "The Playboy of the Western World." The vast majority of really good plays, in truth, are never played in our theatres at all. The odds against them are too great; they cannot run the gauntlet of managers, actors, Comstocks, newspapers, flappers and tired business men."—Henry L. Mencken.

To the little town of La Jolla let us look for light. La Jolla is hard to find on the map, being almost as obscure a village as Bethlehem was in the days when the trip by camel-back from Dan to Beersheba consumed more time than the present run from Siskiyou to San Diego. La Jolla, somewhere near the nethermost extremity of the State, is the birthplace of an intellectual movement, the object of which is to redeem this Philistine world from bondage to the false gods of the theatre. This movement is under the direction of a society called The World Drama Prompters, a Societe Anonyme composed of men who gravitated together from distant parts of the world and found themselves in congenial company. * * * These men profess no propaganda, and they are not banded together for self-aggrandizement or for blacklisting or whitelisting plays. They are hostile to nothing but mediocrity, their only aim is to make known and render available all published plays worth while and all works critical and philosophical relating to the drama of all ages and all peoples. * * *

* * * The World Drama Prompters are responding to a demand of the times. There has been a great awakening of interest in the literature of the theatre, and it is far from gratified by our so-called producers. A play by a continental dramatist is never produced in this country unless it has met with success in England; and the critics of England tell us that their theatres, like our own, with one or two exceptions, are managed by men who know nothing of the literature of the drama. Our managers tell us that they give the public what the public wants. That they don't do anything of the kind is evident from the number of failures they have; and that they don't know what the public wants is evident from the success of plays which they have rejected and which have been produced by actors with a little money and a lot of self-confidence. Maybe the public hasn't a taste for the dramas of Schnitzler, Hauptmann, Strindberg, Gorky and other brilliant playwrights, but as the public hasn't been given a chance to approve or disapprove, how does anybody know? The fact being, however, that many thousands of people read good plays, it is sensible to assume that they would also like to see good plays. Whatever the truth it is certain that the folk who are reading good plays are less unsophisticated than the people who pay to see trashy drama, and that the more people that can be educated above the level of the current theatre the quicker managers will realize the advisability of substituting art for balderdash.

" * * * A drama intellectual in texture, moral in tone, spiritual in appeal, humanitarian in intention, is a powerful educative force."---

FOREWORD

The outstanding feature of the publishing world today is the printed play. This but reflects the fact that the intellectual world is focussed on the drama. Only five or six years ago an eminent critic was called upon during one season to review only two printed plays, one of which was so trivial that he disposed of it in eighteen words. Today this same critic tells us that within one month he received for review "no less than nineteen books of the play, comprising thirty-five separate pieces, and fully half of them are of that quality which entitles them to the utmost consideration and respect."

More and more are the publishing houses both in England and America responding not only to the growing demand for the published play, but also for critical, historical and interpretative works on the drama. This is shown by the ever increasing number of dramatic titles appearing in the publishers' trade lists, but even more significantly by the regular publication of series of plays of international scope, comprising works of the world's greatest dramatists—such for instance as the "Modern Drama Series," the "Drama League Series", "Poet Lore Plays", "Plays of Today and Tomorrow", and the "Contemporary Dramatists Series".

Needless to say, there must be a reason for this contemporary awakening of interest in the drama and the resulting notable activity in the publication of plays. The reason lies in the fact that most of the world's literary geniuses today find in the drama their medium of expression, and the vital issues of the age and of the hour are now most forcibly presented in dramatic form. Today, as never before, "the play's the thing". As Mr. Mencken truly says, " * * * it seems quite natural to look to the shelf of dramatics for the most significant literature of the day."

Of course the printed play is no new thing in Europe. There the dramatist depends for his audience not alone on the stage production of his work, but through the printed form is able to reach a vastly larger public.

The interest of this larger public is thus stimulated, its critical faculty clarified, and its standards raised. How groundless were the fears of English and American producers, that the publication of a play would lessen the public's interest in its theatrical presentation, is proved by the fact that it is precisely in those Continental countries where the play is most widely read that the theatre enjoys the greatest vitality and permanent prosperity. Moreover, the effect of printing the play has been as marked upon the dramatist as on the public and the producer. The changes in technique show this. As long as the play was read only by the actor and producer the dramatist made use of purely professional hieroglyphics which were adequate to fully convey his meaning and intention to the trained minds, but which were unintelligible and disconcerting, if not actually misleading, to the lay reader. In the modern play the stage directions are an illuminating commentary upon the characters, their action and their environment, while sometimes, as for instance with Bernard Shaw, they become exhaustive psychological treatises thereby not only making the play vastly more readable but tending to create a deeper interest in, and a more intelligent appreciation of the drama as a whole.

The World Drama Prompters believe that in view of the present wide-spread interest in dramatic literature they are supplying a much needed compilation and are rendering a service alike to students of the drama, librarians, and publishers by issuing this Bibliography. The list of titles is, we believe, the most complete available in English, although the "Acting Editions" of Samuel French; the Penn Publishing Company; Walter H. Baker & Co., the Dramatic Publishing Company, etc., etc., have purposely been omitted, as such titles are readily accessible in the lists of these publishers. Naturally, the juvenile, and the obviously amateur play have been rigorously excluded.

The Boston Transcript, in an appreciative article, referred to the World Drama Prompters as 'A Drama Clearing House', and while they are not just that, they have, for the benefit of the public and the publishers, established a clearing house of information concerning dramatic publications of every character, both English and American. The constantly increasing number of inquiries coming to us from students, librarians, instructors and societies, as to whether such and such a work were obtainable in English, and if so, by whom published, showed us the necessity of maintaining such a bureau. Its services are at the disposal, gratis, of those interested; to whom also we will send this Bibliography, together with all forthcoming supplements, upon request. We simply ask that when ordering any book upon information derived from us mention be made of the World Drama Prompters.

N. B. In the hope that this publication may prove of equal value in England and America, and in view of the fact that not infrequently a book is out of print in one country while still obtainable in the other, we have wherever possible included the names of both the English and American publishers.

THE DRAMATIST

The Only Journal of Dramatic Technology in the World!

"I have read your magazine with very great interest and pleasure and I consider "The Dramatist" to be a valuable and unique feature in theatrical journalism."—

Sir Arthur Wing Pinero

No student of playwriting can afford to be without this valuable work. It searches out the playwriting principle in current plays, drawing valuable lessons from their positive and negative use of technical qualities.
